QUESTION: Whenever I call my credit card company, they try to get me to sign up for income protection – should I become disabled or die. Is this worth it?

ANSWER: If you already have substantial life and disability insurance policies, you most likely have enough coverage in those policies to cover your credit accounts due to your death or disability. But, if you don't have any type of life and disability policies that does not necessarily mean credit insurance is the best choice. Shop around and get an individual life and/or disability policy that suit your needs.
